Since March 2015, Southwest Airlines has participated in the FAA's Data Communications Integrated Services (DCIS) program, via a contract with the FAA's contractor (Harris Corporation). Southwest's participation is valued at approximately $11 million and involves financial incentives to equip aircraft with DataComm-compatible avionics. This is the only federal grant or contract related to air control services that I am aware of between 2013 and today involving Southwest Airlines.
